Parabol Art Magazine

PARABOL ART MAGAZIN #6 »THE DON'T YOU DARE – ISSUE«
CURATED BY SECTION.A (VIENNA)/ KATHARINA BOESCH, ALEXANDRA FEICHTNER, CHRISTINE HAUPT-STUMMER, ANDREAS KRIŠTOF

This sixth issue of the Parabol Art Magazine, entitled »don't you dare«, combines fourteen artistic positions exploring the theme of transcending seemingly established boundaries. Social norms are expressed in specific rules which, in turn, stipulate clear forms of behaviour in certain social situations. "Don't you dare" is both a warning and an invitation, a threat and a temptation to break with these rules. The range of artistic contributions, answers and instructions has a wide spread.

The artists invited to take part break culturally and religiously defined codes of behaviour, challenging traditional images of the body and parodying family structures. They ignore respect for privacy and put everyday, personal transgressions into the limelight. They infiltrate the art system and instrumentalise other art works, they misappropriate the magazine for a call for sponsors, they devise drastic forms of representation in order to focus on power relations, and they incite people to commit a criminal act.

Most of the artistic contributions were specially conceived for the magazine. section.a is curating Parabol Art Magazine on its tenth anniversary, thus documenting several years of focusing in depth and passionately on contemporary artistic practices and strategies and their communication to sections of society with no affinity for art – often involving a certain »don't you dare«.

Parabol Art Magazine

PARABOL ART MAGAZINE #5 »THE WHERE DO YOU COME FROM ISSUE« CURATED BY YILMAZ DZIEWIOR (BREGENZ)

The »Where do you come from issue« deals with the subject of »Origin«. The open, ambiguous nature of the question permits, or indeed provokes, a host of possible answers. The main underlying issue is the extent to which socialisation affects artistic production and how, for example, one's »home(land)« moulds later developments, with regard to both the artist's personality and work. The work may negotiate childhood and youth, the lives of one's parents, or, more generally, events of generations gone before.

How is cultural identity manifested in times of global movements, and what does it mean to be born and grow up and to live in Cluj, Düsseldorf, Los Angeles, Seoul or Tel Aviv? The artists featured in this issue were invited not only because of their general interest in the above topics, but also because their work recurrently deals in special ways with image production and arranging found or self-made visual material. All contributions were selected especially for the magazine.

PARABOL ART MAGAZINE #4 »THE VALUE ISSUE« CURATED BY ELSY LAHNER (WIEN) UND JASPER SHARP (LONDON)

For this issue, the value issue, of Parabol, curators Elsy Lahner and Jasper Sharp invited international artists to explore the constructs of value and its relevance to their own practice. The concept of value is shown in all its many guises: material and financial, personal and collective, virtual and supposed.

24 carefully selected artists have either provided some of their older works or created new ones for Parabol. In different techniques the wide range of this theme is shown. Some of these works even try to respond to the turmoil currently afflicting societies and markets across the world.

Parabol Art Magazine

PARABOL ART MAGAZINE #3 »THE YOU-AS-ME ISSUE« CURATED BY CAY SOPHIE RABINOWITZ (BASEL / NEW YORK)

Cay Sophie Rabinowitz invited international artists to explore cultural exchange, otherness, and the self as a site of projection (as in the image of a mirror image of images).

Like a scrapbook, the sequences document attempts to negotiate and position artistic and critical identity in relation to professional, cultural, sexual, and gender constructions. The artists she invited in this issue may become a record of her own identity. In the unconventionally expanded format, the expanded field in which Rabinowitz sees herself can include a construction conceived by and through others. Parabol's contents seem to be a series of images hiding more than revealing her, »true« self.

About Cay Sophie Rabinowitz

Cay Sophie Rabinowitz has always aimed to maintain an actively informed yet also independent and non-symbiotic relationship with artists and presentations of artists' work. As a faculty member in the graduate program of Parsons The New School for Design (2000-2007), and as Senior Editor of the international contemporary art publication Parkett (1999-2007), her involvement can best be described as that of a participant observer, a term introduced in the 1930s by Marcel Mauss' ethnography. In other words, Rabinowitz consistently tries to maintain an intimately informed yet actively autonomous perspective on the activities she produces, directs, records, and critiques. Having earned a BA in Philosophy and Literature from Reed College in 1989, Rabinowitz went on to study with Jean Francois Lyotard in the PhD program of Comparative Literature at Emory University in 1991. She then relocated to Berlin to do research on the diverse uses of photomontage (some resisted, others promulgated the rise of fascism) and encountered the work of Hannah Hoeh, who, unlike John Heartfield, did not publish propaganda works to radically counter that of the emerging fascist regime nor did she emigrate out to escape the situation. The way Hoeh stayed close but not involved (moving only to the outskirts of Berlin and responding to current events by selecting and repositioning fragments from periodicals) allowed her to gradually produce the prolific body of work, which became an important precedent for Rabinowitz. This participant observer's perspective—from within yet also somewhat afar—has been revealed in Rabinowitz' writings in a wide range of periodicals, including, Afterall, Artforum, Art Papers, Boiler, Parkett, Sculpture, Texte zur Kunst, X-tra, and even newspapers such as the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung and the Financial Times. Over the past decade, Rabinowitz has published texts on artists in numerous books and catalogues, most recently on Amy Adler (Twin Palms Press, 2005), Fiona Banner (Vanity Press / Power Plant, 2007), Sanford Biggers (Grand Arts, 2007), Nathan Carter, (Ester Schipper, 2006), Sabine Hornig (Hatje Cantz, 2006), Julie Mehretu (Hatje Cantz, 2006), Sarah Morris (Aurel Scheibler, 2005), and Erik Schmidt (Hatje Cantz, 2006), among others.

Parabol Art Magazine

PARABOL ART MAGAZINE #2 »THE DISPLACEMENT ISSUE« CURATED BY AMI BARAK (PARIS)

»The Displacement Issue« is a Parabol issue that brings together artists displaying pieces and ideas that are atypical, unrepresentative or even antithetical to the work for which they are best known. By reversing expectations through this presentation of the unexpected, the unfamiliar, the unknown, the peculiar, this issue is both a revelation and a challenge to the ideas we readily impose on exhibiting contemporary works of art.

Essentially, the aim of Displacement is to focus on art's specific ability to point out what we do not know, as well as allowing us to recognize what we do. As a strategy, this highlights the increasing importance attached to an artist as a personality, rather than focusing on their practice or the qualities of their individual pieces of work. Further, what will be presented only supports a somewhat unknown representation of the artist's output, which will and conversely increase interest in further exploration of his personality.

Now Parabol opens up more than visual space for its select artistic points of view and goes out over the threshold of the visible. In the second edition, the American artist Ben Kinmont challenges the reader's sense of smell with his centrefold display, using an especially produced extract of lavender.

Peter Kogler designed the subject for the packaging on the basis of his most recent motifs and, with the limited edition of the magazine, it emphasizes the role of Parabol as a collector's piece.

Parabol Art Magazine

PARABOL ART MAGAZINE #1 »THE SUPPLEMENT ISSUE« CURATED BY DANIEL BAUMANN

For the first issue of Parabol Art Magazine, Daniel Baumann of Basel invited artists who work as publicists in addition to their artistic activities. In this way Baumann took up the topic of distribution as well as the discussion about the apparently ideal free space of an art journal. The difference between the works of art of the artists and their publications was the topic of discussion. To emphasise this and the publishing characteristics of Parabol, five fanzines, which are specifically made for this issue, were attached.

Parabol Art Magazine

PARABOL SPECIAL EDITION #1 »THE RECOLLECTION ISSUE«
A PERSONAL VIEW ON THE ESSL COLLECTION
CURATED BY PHILIPP KAISER (BASEL / LOS ANGELES)

Parabol Special Edition »The Recollection Issue« is the first special edition of Parabol Art Magazine on occasion of the 35th anniversary of the Essl Collection in Austria. Agnes and Karlheinz Essl's enthusiasm for innovative approaches and an interest in unconventional methods of communicating art were the key factors in offering another extraordinary insight into the collection in the form of Parabol Special Edition.

Based on the concept of Parabol Art Magazine, for Parabol Special Edition »The Recollection Issue«, the Swiss curator Philipp Kaiser (Basel/ L.A.) was invited to present his very personal view on the collection in a two-dimensional space. By emphasising marginal zones or interfaces of the inventory, Philipp created an impressive pictorial story, which also highlights central aspects of the collection as well as the actual practice of collecting.

In general Parabol Special Editions offer an outstanding framework for the singularity of art collections, museums and art institutions by providing a surprising glance from outside.

Parabol Art Magazine

THE MAGAZINE

Parabol Art Magazine is an international periodical for contemporary art in English language, a project by the design agency section.d (Max Haupt-Stummer, Robert Jasensky), the art consultancy section.a (Katharina Boesch, Christine Haupt-Stummer) and Art Director Chris Goennawein. Each issue is produced by a curator. Each curator's task is to examine a contemporary phenomenon in pictures and words on the basis of artistic points of view.

Parabol Art Magazine focuses on the representation of contemporary art in graphic space. Over a period of time, the total pattern created by all of the issues will result in a reflection of central spotlights of contemporary art production, like a two-dimensional exhibition. With its notorious size, the image itself is the main focus of the publication.

THE FORMAT

The formatting attributes of Parabol are quite unlike those of conventional magazines. With its size of 59.4 × 84.1 cm, corresponding to DIN A1 (folded out), the image is in the foreground of the publication. Printing with sheet offset is reminiscent of the printing quality and general appearance of an art catalogue. In this regard, Parabol deviates visibly from the customary production values of a magazine.

THE PEOPLE BEHIND

Parabol Art Magazin has its origins in the symbiosis of the design agency section.d (Max Haupt-Stummer, Robert Jasensky) and the art consultancy section.a (Katharina Boesch, Christine Haupt-Stummer). With the combination of a design office and an art office, the ideal conditions for synergetic effects are at hand, in order to realise a magazine like Parabol. The meeting point of these two agencies is Project Initiator and Art Director Chris Goennawein.
